A great gag gift would be
- Crack or find a leaked username/password for an abandoned LJ blog written in Russian

- Pay the ~$13 fee to change the username to that of your friend
- Surprise them on their birthday of secretly working for the Internet Research Agency!

I'm not saying kassandraseven.livejournal.com hasn't existed since March 14th 2013. It wouldn't prove anything if it did.

I'm just saying that I can't seem to find any evidence it existed before early 2021.

There's got to be a way to figure out when it came online though, right?

Here is some more evidence it was created recently.

Live journal is on the Wayback Machine's crawl list, so journals should get occasionally archived automatically.

Kassandra's never was.

Some more.

In fact, I'd say at this point Jim Stewartson should produce an LJ blog from 2013 that wasn't archived by the Wayback machine for 8 years.

Or the name of the person who gave him the link.

We won't get either.

Instead he'll produce some more locked posts promising a BIG REVEAL.

Or some more articles with crazy claims & no evidence.

Or he'll quietly let it drop, move on & pretend everything is going just like he planned.

Because making shit up IS the plan.
